

GENERAL BALBO, FIVE PLANES, FLY OVER HERE TODAY

Quintet of Airplanes Seen
Over Philadelphia Shortly
After 10 A. M.

TO VISIT THE PRESIDENT

The Entire Formation Includes
Fourteen Transport
Ships

Five planes believed to be those of General Balbo flew to the west of Bristol this morning enroute to Washington.

PHILADELPHIA, July 20.—Five planes carrying General Italo Balbo and a group of his senior officers of the Italian flying fleet from New York to Washington to be guests of President Roosevelt, passed over this city shortly after 10 a. m., E. D. T., today.

NEW YORK CITY, July 20.—General Italo Balbo and a group of his senior officers took off this morning for Washington where they will be guests of President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Fourteen navy, army and marine corps transport planes were used for the flight. The first plane took off from Floyd Bennett field at 9:20 a. m. and the others followed in rapid succession. The Italian officers climbed into the big planes and relaxed as air passengers for the first time since leaving Europe, but General Balbo accepted the invitation of naval officers to pilot the planes in which he rode to the capital. He took off in a big blue and white Douglas amphibian, powered by two Wasp motors. He had with him Lt. B. F. Owens, as co-pilot.
A fourth navy plane was ordered with luggage to enable the Italian officers to make a formal appearance at the White House and at their Embassy in Washington.

The big air transports had been recruited from flying fields all over the country. One arrived last night from Kelly field, Texas. The army group were commanded by Captain William J. McKiernan who had General Pelle-grini as his guest and the navy planes were all from the Anacosta naval base.
They were commanded by Lt. Com.
John Price.

In the mean time, the 24 big Savoia-Marchetti flying boats which had brought Balbo and his men from Italy, rode at anchor in the calm waters of Jamaica Bay nearby.

many residents of lower Bucks county.

Interment will be made in St.
James's Churchyard. Friends may call this evening from 7 to 9:30.

Plan "Welcome House" for Penn's Old Manor

Plans contemplated for the development of the Pennsbury Memorial, the new State park at the site of Pennsbury Manor, William Penn's country mansion on the Delaware River near Tullytown, include erection of "Welcome House" on the original foundations of a long-vanished hay barn and cattle-feeding shed. The architects, Savery & Schetz, have designed a grand edifice, of broad weather-boards and slate roof, with stone-and-brick-flagged terraces and porches, sedulously devised to re-create the architectural atmosphere of Penn's pioneering years in Pennsylvania

Making Alterations To Maple Street Abattoir

Alterations, repairs and extensions are being made to the property on Maple street, for many years used as a slaughter house by the late Frank Heitzman. The property has been purchased by the United Abattoirs Company, of Philadelphia. The company is now being incorporated and plans made for its expansion.

The company plans, when the changes are completed, to kill 150 head of beef, and 200 calves during the summer months and during the pork season to kill hogs in addition to the beef and calves.

Scrapie and sausage will also be made. All products will be sold in the local and Philadelphia markets. The cattle will be brought here in trucks and by rail.

DOYLESTOWN COUNCIL PASSES NEW ORDINANCE

$100 Annual License Fee Will Be Required of Transient Merchants

WEIGHING CONSIDERED

DOYLESTOWN, July 20.—Transient and itinerant merchants who conduct business in Doylestown by selling anything from clothespins to coal, will have to "scream" or pay a tax of either $5 a day, $50 for three months, $75 for six months or $100 a year into the borough treasury.

Borough Council passed the ordinance dealing with this proposition and, after the new ordinance is properly advertised, the law will become effective two weeks later.

Another ordinance, sponsored by the coal dealers of Doylestown passed Council on first and second reading and will come up for final reading next month. This has to do with the weighing of merchandise and commodities sold in the borough by transient retail merchants or dealers.

The business men and coal dealers were represented at Council by John L. DuBois, local attorney. Five members of the Doylestown Business Men's Association attended the meeting, but no coal dealers were present.

Before the transaction of other Councilmanic business, H. H. Green, Norristown attorney, representing the Doylestown Bazaar, against whom the ordinance dealing with transient and itinerant merchants was principally aimed, was given an opportunity to speak.

Mr. Green, a former member of the staff of the Wharton School of Business and Finance, University of Pennsylvania, informed Council that he was sympathetic with the business men of the community to a certain extent but that he believed the proposed ordinance to be illegal and unconstitutional.

"I think the passage of this ordinance by Doylestown Borough Council is in restraint of trade and is certainly an uneconomical move at this time," Mr. Green declared. "There certainly is no power in the borough code which would sanction the passage of such a law."

If Council sees fit to pass this ordinance, the matter is certainly going to be fought out in the courts, I have been informed.

"Passage of an ordinance like this will affect business in general in Doylestown. It is going to keep people away and not only that, it will effect your Doylestown Fair concessionaires."

"Is it worth while to make it difficult for 400 or 500 people to come to town each week? It seems to me that it would be far better to have some of the Doylestown merchants take an interest in the Doylestown Bazaar and have their own booths there with their own goods, rather than force the group out of town that are there now.
This ordinance is certainly going against progress and it is the wrong way to develop competition."

Attorney DuBois was then given the floor on behalf of the Doylestown Business Men's Association.

FRIENDS OF PENNSBURRY ADVANCE PLANS TO HAVE "WELCOME HOUSE" ERECTED ON OLD FOUNDATIONS OF CATTLE BARN, UNEARTHED ALONG THE DELAWARE

Tentative Plans Call for Structure Show Cost to Be $6,500—
Site of Penn's Country Estate is Now a State Park—
Barn Was Built Latter Part of Eighteenth Century

With the conception of the idea of erecting on the old stone foundations of a cattle-feeding barn at Pennsbury Manor, a building to be known as "Welcome House," keen interest is being shown in plans for the historical project.

While excavations have been made during the past few weeks at the site of Penn's country seat, along the Delaware north of here, there was brought to light the original stone foundation of the barn, which was erected at the end of the 18th century. Lovers of history, and in fact all residents of this section, have been taking a deep interest in excavation activities at the Pennsbury Memorial, the new State park along the river.

Those interested in the proposed project have had plans drawn by Albert H. Savery and William Cramp Sheetz, of the Philadelphia architectural firm of Savery & Schetz. It is hoped through co-operation between citizens interested in developing the Pennsbury Memorial into an important historical shrine and the Pennsylvania State Historical Commission, in charge of this new State park, to bring about early erection of a building which would typify the rural architecture of William Penn's pioneering days in Pennsylvania.

"Welcome House" would look down toward the Delaware River, near the spot where Penn once had his barge landing, its broad porches and its terrace, flagged in brick and stone, would provide a shady spot where visitors could sit and dream of Penn's long-ago time. A large ground-floor room would serve as a place where meals could be served from an adjoining kitchen. The upper floor, lighted by dormer windows, would provide living quarters for the caretaker of the Pennsbury
Memorial and his family.

The architects have planned that "Welcome House" shall be of broad weather-boarding, with slate roof. The old foundation walls would be incorporated as basis of the new construction.

"Welcome House" could be built for about $6500. At some later time it is hoped to build a restoration of Pennsbury Manor—the mansion house in which Penn dwelt when he tarried on his 6500-acre estate.

No drawing or engraving ever has been found showing how the mansion house of the Pennsbury Manor looked in Penn's own day. The only picture known to survive reveals nothing except Penn's "brew house"—one of the cluster of out-buildings that stood near the dwellings. Among these separate structures were a kitchen—all food was carried into the mansion from this building and there was no smell of cooking in the house itself; two "larders," a "workhouse," and a "Milan oven" for baking. All these structures were kept within a height of a story and a half so as not to obstruct Penn's view from his own habitation.

Pennsbury Manor was bought from the Indians in 1681, the year before Penn first came to America. The two men who selected this "Seppassung" site for Penn were James Harrison and William Martin. They chose the spot because it was not far from Burlington—on the other side of the Delaware River—where the largest group of Friends then in the New World had set up their homes before the Quakers established Philadelphia.

Harrison supervised the building of a house for Pennsbury Manor. Penn did not deem it satisfactory. So in 1683 work was started on a brick mansion. Penn went back to England before it was completed. But when he returned, in 1699, the house was waiting for him. He spent much time there between 1699 and 1701—the year he sailed away from Pennsylvania never to return.

A leaden tank had been installed in the red-tile roof, to catch rain-water.
That tank was destined to be the ruin of the mansion. Early in the nineteenth century, when the historic house was standing empty, leakage from the tank caused the timbers to rot, roof and floors fell in, and ultimately the walls collapsed.

The mansion, 30 by 60 feet in size, in its palmy days had four large ground-floor rooms, including what Penn spoke of as his "parlor" and his "eating room," a wide hall in the middle and four upstairs rooms, one of which Penn referred to as the "best chamber" and another as "the nursery"—there was the "pallet bedstead" of "Master John," the son always spoken of as "John Penn, the American," because he was born here.

In Penn's day there were few houses in what is now the United States, which were the equal of Pennsbury Manor. The best of English bricklayers had been brought from England by Penn to build it. Penn brought with him to America fine horses, and twelve of them were sheltered in now-vanished stables at Pennsbury Manor.

An old well still exists close to the site of what is to be Welcome House.
Long ago it was filled up. Plans have been made to clear it out, to rear a slate-roofed little shelter above it, and to hang in it once more such an "old oaken bucket" as was used in Penn's day.

Pennsbury Memorial was presented

BACH TO TAKE STAND

Philadelphia, July 20.—In an attempt to support an "alibi of defense," Richard (Big Slim) Bach, 20, was to take the witness stand at his trial today for the murder of Rose McCloskey, 19, and make an absolute denial of his alleged confession to the brutal crime.
This bold stroke of the defense was taken in an effort to rob the Commonwealth of Bach's life which has been demanded by the prosecution.

Simultaneously with his announcement that Bach would testify, defense counsel, Harry H. Johns, informed Judge Harry S. McDevitt and the 12 jurors that Bach is innocent. "It is impossible for any person to be in two places at the same time," he said.
"We will show that this defendant was not where the Commonwealth says he was the night of the murder. We will show what he was doing and in whose company he was and that he was nowhere near the scene of the crime."

In the alleged confession, the defendant admitted beating Miss Mc-Closkey to death with rocks, and of severely injuring her boy-friend, Dennis Royle, 30, when he accosted the two sitting on a park bench last January.

SEE BEER REVENUE INCREASE

Washington, D. C., July 20.—The fast moving procession of States into the prohibition repeal column was expected by Treasury Department experts today to increase the government's revenue from beer. By the end of the year it was anticipated the people of the 12 States in which beer is not yet legalized, will vote to sell this beverage. Beer revenue so far has boosted the government's revenue substantially. In the April-July period, beer and wine revenue will amount to approximately $50,000,000.

GREAT RISE IN PRICES

Washington, D. C., July 20.—A threatened rise in prices, in some cases as high as 100 per cent, within the next 30 to 60 days, was revealed by Hugh
S. Johnson, national industrial recovery administrator, today. At the same time he warned that this was his purpose in rushing to the President a blanket code of hours and wages which would build up the purchasing power to meet this rise.

One of his principal concerns in this threatened rise, he said, is the unorganized "white collar" man, and it is with him in mind that he is striving to work out the blanket code. Some provision to insure this "forgotten man" will be swamped in the anticipated runaway prices.

DAMP WASH CONTINUES DRIVE FOR SECOND PLACE

Defeats Independents By The Score of 8 to 4 in Six Innings

FIVE RUNS IN THE FIFTH

Bristol Twilight League
Results of last night's games
Hibernians, 11; Jefferson, 2
Damp Wash, 8; Independents, 4

Damp Wash A. A. continued its drive for the second half championship of the Bristol Twilight League by coming from behind to beat out the Independents on St. Ann's field last night. Final score was 8-4.

Five runs in the fifth inning after the Independents had taken a 3-0 lead in the first put the game away for the Damp Washers. Six hits after two men were out counted the quintet of tallies.
To make victory certain the laundry-men added two more in the sixth.

"Pete" Antonelli was the hurler who took the pasting from the Damp Wash batmen. For three innings, Antonelli had the ultimate winners eating out of the palm of his hands and during this term did not allow a single safe blow to be made. He weakened a little in the fourth and then collapsed entirely in the fifth.

The losers were credited with six hits from the delivery of "Hokey" Leighton and these were well scattered. The Indies made at least one safe bingle in every inning except the second. In the fifth two hits were registered to give the Independents their final tally.

Tonight the Independents will play
St. Ann's A. A. on St. Ann's field.

Jefferson A. C. was no match for the Hibernians on Sullivan's field last night as they were handed a 11-2 lacing. It was the fourth victory of

FLAMES DESTROY 500 CHICKENS AT NAT'L. FARM SCHOOL

Tenth Fire in Ten Days is Believed to Be the Work of Fire-Bug

STUDENTS AID FIREMEN

Explosion Which Accompanied the Blaze Cannot Be Accounted For

DOYLESTOWN, July 20.—Five hundred one-year old chickens were lost in a fire of undetermined origin that destroyed one-half of the poultry plant of the National Farm School here.

The fire which was accompanied by several distinct explosions is thought to be the work of the alleged fire-bug who has been terrorizing lower Bucks County.

The blaze at the Farm School poultry house was first noticed by Miss Katherine Goodling, daughter of Dean Goodling, who while seated in the front of the Goodling residence had her attention attracted by the explosions. Going outside she saw the poultry plant in flames one-half mile across the campus. The young woman summoned Doylestown fire companies, and the acting fire chief, Frank Stover, notified the county fire marshal.

Two hundred and fifty students who were asleep in the dormitories when the fire broke out at 11 o'clock, were aroused, and forming a bucket brigade, assisted the firemen.

Loss is given at $3,000, which is covered by insurance.

Authorities at the school are at a loss to explain the explosions, stating there were no brooder stoves or defective wiring in the plant.

A feed house nearby and the other section of the poultry plant in which were lodged 500 chickens, were saved.
This is the tenth fire in lower Bucks attributed to a fire-bug in the past 10 days, seven barns, a bungalow and a fertilizer plant having previously been afire, and believed to have been damaged by an incendiary.

All-Star Cast Acts Film Ten Authors Combined In

Glenda O'Brien, on her wedding night, is face to face with a murder charge!

Ten of the world's greatest living authors put their leading character in that predicament and get her out again in "The Woman Accused," the nationally known Paramount-Liberty Magazine story, which comes to the Grand Theatre tonight, featuring Nancy Carroll, Cary Grant, John Halliday, Louis Calhern and Irving Pichel. But it took the combined efforts of internationally famous writers to create the masterly situations and the truly human characters that move through them.

The whole story is Glenda O'Brien's, the story of a girl who killed to save a glorious love from the ruin to which a former lover would have plunged it.
Appalling as were the possible consequences, the man's death is the only way out, and motivated by hate and fear, the crime is committed. She runs away with her fiancé, played by Cary Grant, on one of those three-day
"cruises to nowhere," is pursued by the partner of the dead man, who, in a thrill-packed scene, forces a confession from her in the presence of the boat's entire passenger list.

A breathless climax, in which a blunt-nosed automatic and a sinuous
"bull-whip" vie for victory, sets the romance aright once more and starts Glenda O'Brien on the road to happiness.

CANNIBAL BACTERIA

Modern science is eating scoffing words hurled at medieval believers in healing springs. This complacent age and its scientific men are not prepared to believe in the fountain of youth, which still remains in their eyes a myth, but it has been compelled to admit the existence of healing waters.

Two scientists in New York's aquarium purely by accident discovered in tanks teeming with tropical fish a bacteriophage which causes skin diseases and external infections by devouring the bacteria causing them.

Eighteen years ago science could have found a clue to this discovery in the experiments of an Englishman who killed cultures of deadly cocci by a filtrate derived from others of its kind. An American scientist conducted similar experiments after the war.

Now science wants to know if there is by chance a polyphage—an organism so insatiable that it will devour all forms of microbial life. If there is and science can find it then man's war with many diseases is at an end.

Medicine and bacteriology stand upon the threshold of an advance as great as any ever made. If they can isolate the bacteria eaters, and no microscope has yet revealed them to the human eye, the scientists will render humanity a great service. Their search is for bacteria which eat bacteria which eat human bodies.

TIME TO SMILE

Two factors have been at work to relieve the farm mortgage situation. Farm mortgages are causing less concern now than at any time since the agricultural crisis.

Responsible for the improvement are the farm credit act and the administration's success in boosting farm prices. Getting profitable prices for their products the farmers can meet interest payments, which is all the mortgage holder desires. And as long as he can do that the farmer won't worry because he paid too much for his acres.

The farm credit act has proved highly beneficial although but an infinitesimal part of the $2,000,000,000 appropriated under it has been used to refinance farm mortgages.

Rather than cancel the mortgage indebtedness over 50 per cent of the normal value of the farm, as required by the act where the mortgage is exchanged for Federal Land Bank bonds, the mortgage holders are electing to be lenient with the distressed farmer. This will allow the farmers a chance to work themselves out of their present dilemma, which most of them can do if prices continue to rise.

Little of the $2,000,000,000 for farm loans will ever leave the treasury if farm prices continue to improve, which is well. The less the people borrow the less they must pay back, and the less they owe the sooner the nation's buying power will return to normal, bringing good business with it.

Will repeat bring back good luck?

Not all cold cuts are served at lunch.

Whoever he was who figures out the tax exemption a married man needs to make him even with a bachelor, we'd hate to be his wife.

SYNOPSIS

Attending the premiere of her latest motion picture, beautiful Leni Luneska, the star, is confronted by a shabby, emaciated man, who emerges from the crowd crying, "Leni! It is I, Karl Kruger. Do you want me to tell the whole world?" Leni turns white. She tells the man she will talk with him inside. Lucky Cavanaugh, a gambler, fascinated by Leni's beauty, saunters into the theatre after Kruger.

CHAPTER TWO

Passing through the first doors of the theatre, Leni Luneska and her escort found themselves in a richly-carpeted vastness where golden lights shone upon panoramic murals and softly-gleaming statuary.

Karl Kruger, with unshaven face and soiled collar, kept his shapeliness felt hat on his head and followed defiantly at Leni's heels. A number of elegant people were looking at him as though he polluted the atmosphere.

Douglas Gates, the gentleman with Leni, tried to annihilate Kruger with an angry stare.

"What are you—a panhandler?" he asked. "You're embarrassing Miss Luneska. Take this and get out."

As Gates reached for a banknote, Karl Kruger sneered at him with a contemptuous contortion of his face.

"I want a word with the lady," he said astonishingly. "Do you want to have it in private, Leni, or in public?"

"Will you wait, Karl—please," said Leni tensely. Her throat was throbbing. "There must be some place you can stay till after the performance. You know I cannot talk to you now—"

Kruger thrust his face closer to her own. "So you are ashamed of me, hey?" he demanded. "You think because—"

More people were stopping to listen and to look, but Kruger suddenly ceased speaking. From the rear a powerful hand had closed on his arm like a steel trap that pressed paralyzing pain into his flesh.

"He'll wait, Miss Luneska," said Lucky Cavanaugh. "There won't be the slightest annoyance, I assure you."

A dark red flush was spreading on Kruger's forehead. He ground his teeth and was silent, as the strong fingers bored deep into his stringy muscle. Luneska was aware only that a tall and agreeable young man was somehow giving her a respite.

"Thank you so much," she said swiftly to Cavanaugh. "It is better so, Karl. Later—after the theatre—"

Cavanaugh bowed slightly and turning away, he moved Karl Kruger around also, compelling him with a grip so punishing that the man began to weave in anguish.

Douglas Gates took Leni's arm protectively and shepherded her toward an aisle.

"A poor unfortunate I used to be—friend in Europe," she said hurriedly to Gates. "Think no more about it—I'll speak to him later."

A uniformed usher hurried toward Cavanaugh. "Shall I call an officer to take charge of him, sir?"

"Ask the manager to step here," Cavanaugh said.

The usher who knew the gambler

by sight and was impressed, sped off like a shot. Cavanaugh led Kruger up against the wall and relaxed the pressure.

"I don't know who you are, and I don't care," he said quietly. "I'm going to fix it so you can wait in a private office and see Miss Luneska after the show, as she suggested. If you try to grab her big night I'm going to knock you as cold as a mackerel. Is that perfectly plain?"

Kruger began to rub his arm as the flush faded from his face. Pain had taken some of the brass out of him.

"She'll see me sooner or later," he said sullenly. "I'll wait peacefully."

"That's better," responded Cavanaugh evenly.

The disposition of Kruger was easily arranged when Sol Kaufmann, the manager, arrived rotund and perspiringly eager to suppress any excitement.

Cavanaugh's explanation and desire in the matter was enough for Kaufmann. The simplest way of handling a situation was always the best. They took Kruger to an office back of the balcony and told him to wait there.

"These foreign stars always have one foot in the mud," said Kaufmann as he came downstairs with Cavanaugh. "Only I wish they wouldn't track it into my theater."

"To bad Luneska's big night had to be spoiled by this mug," Cavanaugh remarked.

Kaufmann shrugged indifferently. "As soon as an actor gets in the money the chisellers begin to show up. That's Hollywood. These stars all got something they're willing to pay to keep quiet. But don't worry about Luneska—she'll make plenty of dough."

ness Men's Association and the coal dealers. "I am not going back to the dark ages to present our side of the question, as Mr. Green did in presenting his," Mr. DuBois declared. "Members of Council, you know our stand outlined to you at previous meetings. This ordinance is tantamount to a protective tariff."

"Contrary to the contention of Mr. Green that 400 or 500 people come to Doylestown weekly to the bazaar and leave a lot of money in town, statistics show that several thousands of dollars are taken out of Doylestown every week by itinerant and transient merchants, and they pay no taxes whatsoever."

"Gentlemen of Council, I refer you to the Act of 1931 which has amended the Act of 1929, and, therefore, I ask you on behalf of the merchants and citizens of Doylestown that the ordinance be passed."

Before leaving Mr. DuBois requested of Council that in considering the ordinance, that it be given first and second reading at this month's meeting so that it can come up for final action next month.

No time was lost in passing the ordinance and itinerant merchant ordinance. Each paragraph was acted upon individually. Weak points were strengthened at the reading and teeth were placed in it where needed.

There was some discussion about the tax fee to be charged the itinerant merchant, but it was finally agreed that the $5 per day, $50 for three months, $75 for six months and $100 per year tax would be high enough. One Councilman stated that the coal dealers desired the tax to be made as high as $300 a year, the limit allowed by state law, but others thought $100 annually sufficient.

Under the new ordinance, if a person operates more than one truck in bringing his wares into Doylestown—such as two or three coal trucks, for instance—he must pay 50 per cent of the original tax for each and every additional truck.

The new ordinance fixes the penalty for violation on the part of any itinerant or transient merchant or coal distributor at $5 to $300 fine or thirty days in jail. The big range was placed in the fine provision so that the Justice of the Peace could use his own judgment in pronouncing a fine on the offender, according to what he might be selling. The $300 fine, it was explained, would amply take care of itinerant coal merchants who failed to pay a tax, while the $5 fine would better suit the fellow who might be selling "bootleg" shoes.

President A. Harry Clayton stated that so far as he is concerned some changes will have to be made in the ordinance regulating the weighing of merchandise and commodities sold in the borough by transient retail merchants or dealers, before it is finally passed. The ordinance was given first and second reading. This is known as the coal dealers' ordinance although it does not carry that caption. Mr. Clayton and other members of Council expressed the opinion that it is no more than right that people delivering so-called "bootleg" coal into Doylestown should pay a tax the same as local coal dealers.

Build Roads!

PORTLAND CEMENT
Has pulled America out of the mud!

THAT GIVE MEN WORK · · THAT GIVE YOU DRIVING SAFETY, CONVENIENCE COMFORT AND LOW DRIVING COST

The United States Government has sounded the call, by giving a direct grant to the States, of at least four hundred million dollars for highway improvement. This is part of a vast program of public works to spread national employment and to stimulate business.

This work will be done through your own State Highway Department. The Federal Government asks no return except that the money be expended wisely—that the improvements be permanent, substantially built and of a type that gives men work.

CONCRETE ROADS meet every specification. They are permanent. Maintenance cost is much less than that of any other type. They give you the greatest driving safety, convenience and comfort. They cost less to drive over—saving you gas, tires, repairs and depreciation. They will give work to men now on doles in your community. Money will flow across the counters of home stores.

Insist on CONCRETE for your roads—get the most and the best road for the money—and the maximum employment for labor!

Remember the roads of 1910? Narrow strips of dirt—ankle-deep dust—quagmires of mud—The cost of moving goods was terrific!

The engineers have built, with cement, a network of CONCRETE highways throughout the nation that is nearly one hundred thousand miles in length. Cement spanned great rivers and broad valleys with concrete. Cement made the modern motor vehicle practical; made motor-ing a part of our daily life.

CANNIBAL BACTERIA

Modern science is eating scoffing words hurled at medieval believers in healing springs. This complacent age and its scientific men are not prepared to believe in the fountain of youth, which still remains in their eyes a myth, but it has been compelled to admit the existence of healing waters.

Two scientists in New York's aquarium purely by accident discovered in tanks teeming with tropical fish a bacteriophage which cures skin diseases and external infections by devouring the bacteria causing them.

Eighteen years ago science could have found a clue to this discovery in the experiments of an Englishman who killed cultures of deadly cocci by a filtrate derived from others of its kind. An American scientist conducted similar experiments after the war.

Now science wants to know if there is by chance a polyphage—an organism so insatiable that it will devour all forms of microbial life. If there is and science can find it then man's war with many diseases is at an end.

Medicine and bacteriology stand upon the threshold of an advance as great as any ever made. If they can isolate the bacteria eaters, and no microscope has yet revealed them to the human eye, the scientists will render humanity a great service. Their search is for bacteria which eat bacteria which eat human bodies.

Two factors have been at work to relieve the farm mortgage situation. Farm mortgages are causing less concern now than at any time since the agricultural crisis.

Responsible for the improvement are the farm credit act and the administration's success in boosting farm prices. Getting profitable prices for their products the farmers can meet interest payments, which is all the mortgage holder desires. And as long as he can do that the farmer won't worry because he paid too much for his acres.

The farm credit act has proved highly beneficial although but an infinitesimal part of the $2,000,000,000 appropriated under it has been used to refinance farm mortgages.

Rather than cancel the mortgage indebtedness over 50 per cent of the normal value of the farm, as required by the act where the mortgage is exchanged for Federal Land Bank bonds, the mortgage holders are electing to be lenient with the distressed farmer. This will allow the farmers a chance to work themselves out of their present dilemma, which most of them can do if prices continue to rise.

Little of the $2,000,000,000 for farm loans will ever leave the treasury if farm prices continue to improve, which is well. The less the people borrow the less they must pay back, and the less they owe the sooner the nation's buying power will return to normal, bringing good business with it.

Will repeat bring back good luck?

Not all cold cuts are served at lunch.

Whoever he was who figures out the tax exemption a married man needs to make him even with a bachelor, we'd hate to be his wife.

SYNOPSIS

Attending the premiere of her latest motion picture, beautiful Leni Luneska, the star, is confronted by a shabby, emaciated man, who emerges from the crowd crying, "Leni! It is I, Karl Kruger. Do you want me to tell the whole world?" Leni turns white. She tells the man she will talk with him inside. Lucky Cavanaugh, a gambler, fascinated by Leni's beauty, snuggles into the theatre after Kruger.

Passing through the first doors of the theater, Leni Luneska and her escort found themselves in a richly-carpeted vastness where golden lights shone upon panoramic murals and softly-gleaming statuary.

Karl Kruger, with unshaven face and soiled collar, kept his shapeliness felt hat on his head and followed defiantly at Leni's heels. A number of elegant people were looking at him as though he polluted the atmosphere.

Douglas Gates, the gentleman with Leni, tried to annihilate Kruger with an angry stare.

"What are you—a panhandler?" he asked. "You're embarrassing Miss Luneska. Take this and get out."

As Gates reached for a banknote, Karl Kruger sneered at him with a contemptuous contortion of his face.

"I want a word with the lady," he said astonishingly. "Do you want to have it in private, Leni, or in public?"

"Will you wait, Karl—please!" said Leni tensely. Her throat was throbbing. "There must be some place you can stay till after the performance. You know I cannot talk to you now—"

Kruger thrust his face closer to her own. "So you are ashamed of me, hey?" he demanded. "You think because—"

More people were stopping to listen and to look, but Kruger suddenly ceased speaking. From the rear a powerful hand had closed on his arm like a steel trap that pressed paralyzing pain into his flesh.

"He'll wait, Miss Luneska," said Lucky Cavanaugh. "There won't be the slightest annoyance, I assure you."

A dark red flush was spreading on Kruger's forehead. He ground his teeth and was silent, as the strong fingers bored deep into his stringy muscles. Luneska was aware only that a tall and agreeable young man was somehow giving her a respite.

"Thank you so much," she said swiftly to Cavanaugh. "It is better so, Karl. Later—after the theater—"

Cavanaugh bowed slightly and turning away, he moved Karl Kruger around also, compelling him with a grip so punishing that the man began to weep in anguish.

Douglas Gates took Leni's arm protectively and shepherded her toward an aisle.

"A poor unfortunate I used to be—friend in Europe," she said hurriedly to Gates. "Think no more about it—I'll speak to him later."

A uniformed usher hurried toward Cavanaugh. "Shall I call an officer to take charge of him, sir?"

"Ask the manager to step here," Cavanaugh said.

The usher who knew the gambler

by sight and was impressed, sped off like a shot. Cavanaugh led Kruger up against the wall and relaxed the pressure.

"I don't know who you are, and I don't care," he said quietly. "I'm going to fix it so you can wait in a private office and see Miss Luneska after the show, as she suggested. If you try to grab her big night I'm going to knock you as cold as a mackerel. Is that perfectly plain?"

Kruger began to rub his arm. The flush faded from his face. Pain had taken some of the brass out of him.

"She'll see me sooner or later," he said sullenly. "I'll wait peacefully."

"That's better," responded Cavanaugh evenly.

The disposition of Kruger was easily arranged when Sol Kaufmann, the manager, arrived round and perspicuously eager to suppress any excitement.

Cavanaugh's explanation and desire in the matter was enough for Kaufmann. The simplest way of handling a situation was always the best. They took Kruger to an office back of the balcony and told him to wait there.

"These foreign stars always have one foot in the mud," said Kaufmann as he came downstairs with Cavanaugh. "Only I wish they wouldn't track it into my theater."

"To bad Luneska's big night had to be spoiled by this mug," Cavanaugh remarked.

Kaufmann shrugged indifferently. "As soon as an actor gets in the money the chisellers begin to show up. That's Hollywood. These stars all got something they're willing to pay to keep quiet. But don't worry about Luneska—she'll make plenty of dough."

Kaufmann already had erased the incident from his busy mind which was a machine geared to quick adjustment of details and emergencies.

But strangely, a handsome young gambler whose professional creed kept him from dipping into other people's affairs, found himself starting down the aisle that led to Luneska's box, although his ticket called for a seat in another location.

Lucky Cavanaugh, tall and steady-eyed and dressed in a dinner suit, had taken a new and dangerous path. He was dogging the steps of a strange woman. He did not realize it, but he was following the blonde head, the slim beauty and the exciting perfume of Leni Luneska.

He only knew that there was an increased circulation in his blood, and that he was on a quest from which it would not be easy to turn back.

The singers and dancers of the prologue were already on the stage. Light in the aisles was dim. Most of the audience was already settled. There was a buzz of conversation in the air for no one was really interested in the seventy-five girls with their powdered white bodies who filled the stage with their involved dancing.

An usher, smartly uniformed, pursued Cavanaugh down the aisle and stretched out a hand to examine the ticket stub.

The knowledge that anything can be arranged in Hollywood gave Cavanaugh a sensation of nonchalant assurance. A folded bank note passed from his hand to the usher.

"See if you can find me a seat in Luneska's box—like a good pal," he said in a low voice.

In the dim light his smile was pleasant and confidential. The young usher became a conspirator at once.

"Wait here," he said quietly. "I'll see what I can do."

.....

Leni Luneska sat next to the raft in the box, her opera cloak draped over the back of a chair. Her arms, shoulders and back were white and alive in the semi-darkness.

Several people of importance sat in the same box, executives from the studio and their wives. To these, the individual Luneska in the flesh was much less interesting than the photographic Luneska who would presently flash upon the screen.

Long familiarity with screen celebrities creates very little awe. Star and studio are natural enemies. Temperaments and contracts are in perpetual conflict and there is equal ego on each side. It is, as everyone agrees, a crazy business.

The one outsider in the box was Douglas Gates and, at the moment, he was asking Leni to marry him. "Why don't you promise me tonight?" he whispered. "I don't like to keep persuading you, but I don't like to wait."

His insistence was getting to be a bit of an old story. A man in the neighborhood of fifty is always at a disadvantage with a young and beautiful woman.

Leni freely admitted to herself that Douglas Gates was without a flaw. Solidly wealthy, cultured, a gentleman. A bachelor of inherited background with an authentic standing in the social and business life of the city. Handsome, too, with a moustache after the manner of a European gentleman.

The trouble was that she did not care for him, as women express it, in that way. In all other respects, he was the most satisfying person she had ever known.

With the last few minutes Leni had practically decided to marry him. She leaned her head close to his, and there was something like weariness in the movement.

"Douglas, darling—would you understand me always?" she asked softly. "Would you protect me from the whole world—still love me in all circumstances?"

"Naturally," he responded patiently.

At the single word, uttered so tamely, a little smile that was not truthfully formed on Leni's lips. "Yes, of course you would," she murmured. "Naturally."

Gates did not press his argument. These skirmishes with Luneska always ended against the stone wall of her silence. At his age a man dreams of love but the conquering zeal of youth is lacking.

Despite his glossed and brushed hair, despite his erect shoulders in their faultless evening coat, Douglas Gates was tired. He had played polo that afternoon. Ten years ago he would have emerged from a cold shower fit to carry on till dawn. Tonight his head felt heavy, his eyes weary.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE— WITHOUT CALOMEL

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

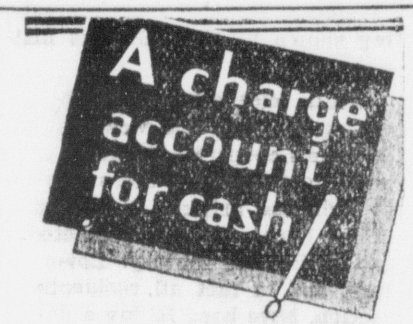

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas builds up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, you often break out in blotches. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resent a substitute. 25c at drug stores. © 1931 C. M. Co.

C. W. Winter Distributes Domestic Science Book

Variety in meals, something different each day in the year, if desired, is the keynote of a new book on domestic science by Miss Verna L. Miller, director of Frigidaire home economics, for which a widespread demand has developed. So interested have housewives throughout the country become in this work by Miss Miller, that a new edition has just been run off the press and rushed to dealers in all parts of the United States for distribution to all who are interested.

A new supply of these books has just been received by C. W. Winter, local representative of Frigidaire, subsidiary of General Motors. The books are being distributed free to any who call at the showroom of Mr. Winter, on Mill street.

The new book, titled "The Frigidaire Key to Meal Planning," is neither a recipe book nor a cook book. It is a volume that actually plans the meals for the housewife, helping her to avoid any tiresome repetition in the arranging of her menus.

In the planning of the menus outlined by Miss Miller, careful study has been given to proper dietetic balance so that the necessary combination of food elements needed for health and energy is offered. All this is done while eliminating the monotony of serving.

"The Key to Meal Planning" is based on studies made by Miss Miller with the assistance of Mrs. Alta Bolder Hirsch, director of dietetics at the Miami Valley Hospital in Dayton, Ohio.

Iness Men's Association and the coal dealers.

"I am not going back to the dark ages to present our side of the question, as Mr. Green did in presenting his," Mr. DuBois declared. "Members of Council, you know our stand outlined to you at previous meetings. This ordinance is tantamount to a protective tariff."

"Contrary to the contention of Mr. Green that 400 or 500 people come to Doylestown weekly to the bazaar and leave a lot of money in town, statistics show that several thousands of dollars are taken out of Doylestown every week by itinerant and transient merchants, and they pay no taxes whatsoever."

"Gentlemen of Council, I refer you to the Act of 1931 which has amended the Act of 1929, and, therefore, I ask you on behalf of the merchants and citizens of Doylestown that the ordinance be passed."

Before leaving Mr. DuBois requested of Council that in considering the ordinance, that it be given first and second reading at this month's meeting so that it can come up for final action next month.

No time was lost in passing the transient and itinerant merchant ordinance. Each paragraph was acted upon individually. Weak points were strengthened at the reading and teeth were placed in it where needed.

There was some discussion about the tax fee to be charged the itinerant merchant, but it was finally agreed that the $5 per day, $50 for three months, $75 for six months and $100 per year tax would be high enough. One Councilman stated that the coal dealers desired the tax to be made as high as $300 a year, the limit allowed by state law, but others thought $100 annually sufficient.

Under the new ordinance, if a person operates more than one truck in bringing his wares into Doylestown—such as two or three coal trucks, for instance—he must pay 50 per cent of the original tax for each and every additional truck.

The new ordinance fixes the penalty for violation on the part of any itinerant or transient merchant or coal distributor at $5 to $300 fine or thirty days in jail. The big range was placed in the fine provision so that the Justice of the Peace could use his own judgment in pronouncing a fine on the offender, according to what he might be selling. The $300 fine, it was explained, would amply take care of itinerant coal merchants who failed to pay a tax, while the $5 fine would better suit the fellow who might be selling "bootleg" shoes.

President A. Harry Clayton stated that so far as he is concerned some changes will have to be made in the ordinance regulating the weighing of merchandise and commodities sold in the borough by transient retail merchants or dealers, before it is finally passed. The ordinance was given first and second reading. This is known as the coal dealers' ordinance although it does not carry that caption. Mr. Clayton and other members of Council expressed the opinion that it is no more than right that people delivering so-called "bootleg" coal into Doylestown should pay a tax the same as local coal dealers.
